In the spring, hundreds of persons suffer from boils, carbuncles, and other eruptive diseases. These are evidences that the system is trying to purge itself of impurities, and that it needs the powerful aid which is afforded by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

We regret to hear that Mrs. S. P. Collins, whose home is near Guthrie, is dangerously ill at the residence of her daughter, Mrs. Millie Pardee, near this city. She is a most estimable lady and her friends and family are greatly distressed by her affliction.

CAPT. R. Y. JOHNSON has a peculiar case in Court—the court connected therewith involves some other bachelor witnesses and we would suggest to Judge Munford that a parson be summoned and that he cause W. F. Taylor, Polk Prince and others to testify in the case.

WHITFIELD'S Steamboat picnic to-day.

Death of Dr. J. M. Larkin.

James Monroe Larkin, M. D., was born in Dickson county, Tenn., near Charlotte, June 28, 1818, and died at his home on Greenwood in this city, May 11, 1887, at 7 o'clock P. M.

He was twice married—first to Miss Jennie Goldwell, of Dickson county, which union was blessed with three children, a daughter and two sons—the sons survive him. His second marriage was to Miss Emma V. Bagwell, the refined and cultured daughter of the late Major P. Bagwell, of this county. A daughter was born to them—now just entering her teens—she and her mother remain to mourn their irreparable loss.

Dr. Larkin was a remarkable man, and the meager sketch we give does not do justice to his memory, for when an eminently useful man passes away he deserves more than mere mention of a few plainly told facts. He has been the child of affliction all his life. Though small in stature and frail in body, he possessed indomitable energy; and truth makes us say that his great mental powers helped to consume the physical man. He was a man of strong convictions and had the moral nerve to maintain them; was courteous in his bearing, and although dignified, was approachable and companionable. When he believed he was right he was only changed by clear convincing. His integrity was unquestioned. He possessed rare conversational powers, but, although a great talker, he always spoke solid sense. Taken altogether, he was the best posted man, in every respect, we every met. His language was chaste and pure and often crisp and sparkling. He was a good friend and neighbor, a considerate and prudent husband and father.

He commenced the study of his profession in May, 1843, with Dr. Jennings, in Nashville; attended the lectures in that city and Louisville; received diplomas from both universities and also a complimentary one for faithful work. He began the practice of medicine in his native county, and continued there until the war came on. He was commissioned surgeon in the Confederate army by Gov. Harris, and served with marked ability, with Drs. Sanders and Stout during the war. He, like many others, lost the accumulation of years by the war. After his marriage to his last wife he became a citizen of Clarksville, and resided here until death. He came comparatively a stranger, and had a hard struggle to secure a footing, as others of known ability in his profession were established here. Although poor in purse, and laboring under constant affliction he soon received liberal aid and afterwards an extensive practice, and won for himself the esteem and confidence of his patrons and co-laborers in the profession. During the past year disease made such inroads upon his physical organism that he had to retire from general practice and confine himself to office work at home, and against such an array of forces he continued to labor until a few weeks ago he became so prostrated that he had to permanently abandon the practice of the profession to which he was so ardently attached and which he had so nobly and ably adorned for two-thirds of his life. He has, indeed, been a grand, old humanitarian, and the Divine Penman has given him many credits upon the records of eternity for his faithful, unselfish work.

No man ever received more kind attention from all classes in the community than did he. His devoted wife, though in feeble health, stood by him day and night, and seemed to anticipate his every wish—her attentions never ceased till death came to quietly and gently release him from his long and severe suffering.

Dr. George Swift, now about 60 years of age, was a student under Dr. Larkin, and in return for his many acts of kindness to him when he was an orphan boy, left his home and practice, (although a poor man,) to stay with and nurse him for weeks prior to his death. Such gratitude is seldom witnessed, and we can not let this unselfish act and nobility of soul pass without notice.

He was a member of the Presbyterian church in this city, and of late, repeatedly said that he was fully persuaded in whom he had put his trust. He called his little daughter, Jennie, to his side a few days ago, and gave her his parting advice and blessing, and on her leaving the room he remarked, "I have been troubled much in mind of late about leaving my daughter, at her age, but since I have put my entire trust in God I believe she will be properly cared for." Such faith disarms death of its sting and the grave of its victory.

Funeral services were conducted at his late residence Thursday evening at 5:30 o'clock, by Rev. J. W. Lupton, his pastor, and Rev. W. R. Peebles, pastor of the Methodist church, for whom he entertained the highest regard. A large crowd assembled to pay respect to the honored dead. In accordance with his request the remains were sent from here yesterday morning for interment at Charlotte.

Scriven's Patent

Elastic Seam

DRAWERS

Are provided with an improvement consisting of an Elastic Insertion at the inner and outer seams, which gives elasticity in movement and comfort in fit. The Drawers are cut in figure outlines and afford the wearer all the advantages of knit goods, while retaining the superior comfort of woven fabric. The Patent Elastic Seam, which contains no rubber, retains its springiness, and wears longer than the other portion of the garment. It makes the Drawers conform to the position of the wearer, and avoids any stain, no matter what attitude the body assumes.

These Drawers conform strictly to the outline of the figure when standing at rest, and give ease and comfort, and are without that tightness of feeling necessarily produced by other garments.

One of the peculiarities of these Drawers is that the seams only being elastic, they allow a remarkably easy action in walking, as all the friction caused by motion is at once transferred to the seams, while the main fabric of the Drawers is allowed to retain its shape and position.

It will also be found that these Patent Elastic Seam Drawers are equally well adapted to all athletic positions, and allow the greatest freedom and ease. In the position assumed in the cut not the least tension is produced on the main portion of the goods, while the elastic seams allow the transformation of the figure as seen in the position, which would be impossible in others without producing great strain on the goods and friction upon the person.
